COTTON LITERATURE is compiled mainly from material received in the Library of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Copies of the publications listed herein can not be supplied by the Department except in the case of publications expressly designated as issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Books, pamphlets, and periodicals mentioned may ordinarily be obtained from their respective publishers or from the Secretary of the issuing organization. Many of them are available for consultation in public or other libraries.

Resumé of a biological struggle.

"Cotton in Columbia is attacked by a pink bollworm, Sacadoles pyralis, Dyar, which is parasitized by an unidentified Braconid that ovoposits in larvae not more than four days old. The egg and larval stages of the parasite last 7-10 days each, the prepupal stage up to 12 hours, and the pupal 6-9 hours. Parthenogenesis occurs, the resulting progeny being males. From mid-May to mid-August, when the bolls are attacked by the larvae, Sacadoles pyralis produces two generations, while the Braconid can produce six. S. Pyralis and the parasite may deposit up to 256 and 64 eggs respectively. A chalcidoid hyperparasite was obtained from up to 5 per cent of the pupae of the Braconid."- Empire Cotton Growing Rev. 16(1):62. January 1939.

"Two records were registered in 1937-38, the world's largest production and the largest quantity of available supplies. The main question of the year was consequently that of consumption. The year 1938 opened with a carry-over of about 3 million tons, including more than 1.2 million tons in the mills. Mill stocks (invisible supply) were the largest ever recorded, exceeding the previous record of 1934 by more than 100,000 tons. Visible stocks were normal and the smallest since 1931 and 1.3 million tons smaller than the high record of 1932. World supplies of all kinds of cotton jumped from the previous record 1936-37 of 9.8 million tons to 11.2 million tons. These large supplies would suffice for two years' normal consumption, but they do not appear to have had a depressing effect on the world market. Prospects are discussed.-C"-Textile Inst. Concerning the regularizing effect of doubling.
"A mathematical analysis is made of the increase in the regularity of slivers produced by doubling and numerical examples are studied. It is shown that the quadratic deviation of a doubled sliver is directly proportional to the deviation of the original sliver and inversely proportional to the square root of the doubling number and that the increase in regularity produced by doubling is dependent only on the total number of doublings and not on the way in which they are carried out.-C."-Textile Inst. This is a description of the work done and results obtained from the analyses of samples taken from a card in a fine-goods mill which cards 1 3/16" middling cotton at a production of 4 1/2 pounds per hour. It was found that this card discarded many short fibres in its wastes, but that this action does not appreciably affect the mean fibre length and fibre distribution of this particular "long staple" cotton. The lickerin waste, cylinder screenings, scavenger waste were found to be of very poor length quality. The cylinder strips proved to be of good length quality, while the doffer strips were definitely inferior to the card sliver.

"This represents a revision of the 23 page summary, MS-41 issued in February 1938, which lists and gives a brief review of the cotton diversion programs carried on by the Marketing Section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to the end of 1937. Developments since that time in this program to increase the consumption of cotton through new outlets have been sufficiently extensive to necessitate a more detailed discussion of new cotton uses to date... Cotton and cotton products have been supplied for a number of uses among which are included: Houses and other structures, bale covering, ditches and canal linings, stabilizing road cuts and fills, roads, streets and airport runways, shading or protecting tree seedlings, protecting fruits and vegetables, use in fumigating tobacco plants, bags for peanuts, and insulating and covering beehives.

"The Ser Island cotton crop of 1937 was seriously affected by the abnormally heavy rains in January which caused much loss through shedding and rotting of the bolls. In spite of the large increase in acreage, 5,294 acres in 1936-37 as compared with 3,540 acres in the previous season, there was only a small increase in production, the yield per acre of lint falling to the low level of 79 lb. The low yield was however in some measure compensated for by the good price obtained for the bulk of the crop. The Government cotton ginnery was successfully operated during the year... Peasants delivering cotton to the Government ginnery were paid at the very satisfactory rate of 9.33 cents per lb. of seed cotton, the total sum paid in this respect amounting to £8,019."
